DR. C. S. GONSTEAD CELEBRATES

50 YEARS

IN CHIROPRACTIC

JULY, 1923—JULY, 1973

C. S. GONSTEAD, D.C.

In 1934 and 1935, C. S. Gonstead officially gave to the profession the chiropractic concepts he had researched since 1923. "I dissected the spine to see how nerve pressure was produced. I found that the vertebra slipped on the disc dislodging the nucleus which protruded into various parts of the disc producing the pressure on the nerves. I found that the most common area for this occurrence was at the intervertebral foramen. The technique of adjusting I developed consisted of moving these segments onto the disc repositioning the nucleus. Therein lies the uniqueness of my work—The Gonstead Technique has a specific application on the affected segment or segments only."

The Gonstead Disc Concept is the core of Dr. Gonstead's other achievements. He also developed instrumentation for detection of nerve pressure; designed x-ray screens with varying speeds to accommodate body density; redesigned the knee-chest table, the cervical stool, and the pelvic table; refined the Hydraulic Hylo, and created the Gonstead Viking X-Ray Unit.

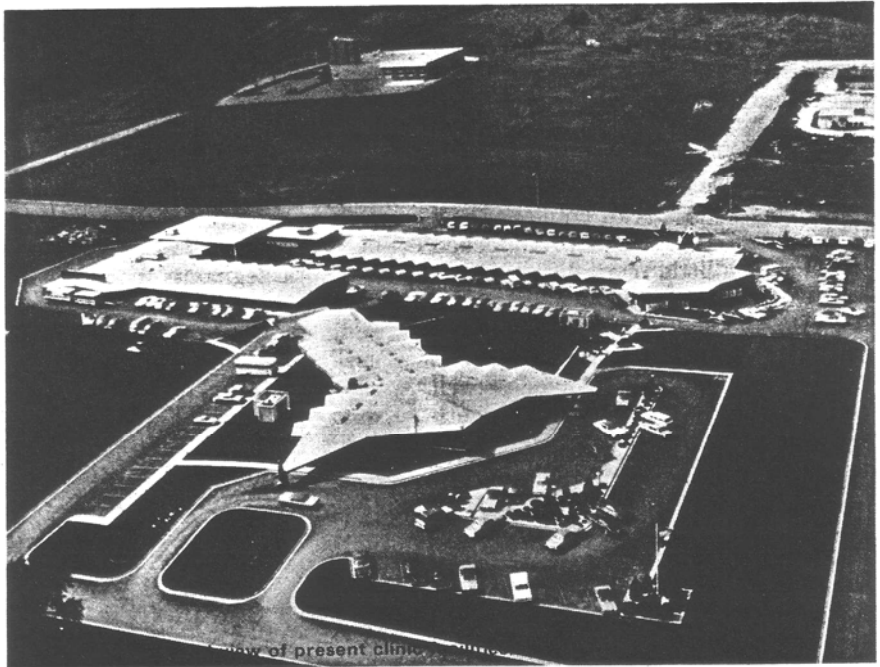

With 50 years of knowledge and experience, C. S. Gonstead still maintains his traditional "around-the-clock" schedule of caring for patients 6½ days a week. Asked for his secret of success, Dr. Gonstead replies, "There is no secret, just lots of patients who get well."
